

Solar energy is powering the world – but the complete energy transition requires an unprecedented volume of solar panels.

In order to make this transformation truly sustainable, it is imperative to create a circular economy for these materials and components. The more we can repair, refurbish, reuse and ultimately recycle solar systems, the faster we can transition to a world without new mining operations that pollute and contribute to the climate crisis.

