Municipal Utility Districts (MUDs) provide important services, but they can be impacted by climate-related disruptions. This work connects community members, local government, economic development, and the MUDs to learn about each others' challenges and co-create solutions for sustainability and resilience.

Using social vulnerability data, the team will identify the communities at greatest risk in Precinct 4 and develop a series of meetings to build relationships, establish priorities, and set the course for understanding how this collaboration can best meet the needs of those most at risk from climate stressors and shocks.
