- Brockton is a New England city in Plymouth County, Massachusetts, the sixth largest City with a population of around 105,000. Brockton was America's largest producer of shoes until the latter parts of the 20th century. The city has been the headquarters retailer of W.B. Mason, but it has since diversified to include other industries such as healthcare, education, and manufacturing.
- Brockton has faced several challenges, including poverty, crime, and regional and local racial segregation. Despite these challenges, the city has made progress in recent years, particularly in developing its downtown area, by highlighting its diversity and rich history and working toward a more welcoming atmosphere for businesses and its diverse residents. Brockton is a HubZone, Federal Opportunity Zone and a Low to Moderate-Income area.
